

Sotiris Tsiodras is Professor of Medicine and Infectious Diseases at the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens Medical School and the Chief Scientific Advisor for the COVID-19 pandemic for the Hellenic CDC and the Greek Government. He completed post graduate training in Internal Medicine and Infectious Diseases at Harvard Medical School in the USA. Professor Tsiodras also holds a master's degree in the Medical Sciences from Harvard Medical School and was a recipient of the Clinical Investigator Training Program fellowship conducted by Harvard Medical School and the MIT Division of Health Sciences and Technology both in Boston, MA. He has a PhD in Medicine from the National and Kapodistrian University of Athens Medical School. He is a member of the European CDC Advisory Forum since 2009 and a fellow of the Infectious Diseases Society of America (IDSA); he also has served as the secretary of the ESCMID Study Group for Respiratory viruses. He has published more than 250 peer-reviewed papers in international journals and is currently doing clinical work and research in internal medicine and infectious diseases.